Overview

What is an open container?

49.031 (b) says that a person must knowingly possess an “open container.” 49.031 (a) (1) tells us that an open container is any bottle, can, or other receptacle that has any alcohol in it. The statute also tells us that this includes any container that is open, has been opened, has a broken seal, or has had any of the contents partially removed.

What is an open container in Washington?

In Washington, an open container describes any vessel containing alcohol with a broken seal or with liquid partially removed. Whether it’s a flask or a half drunk bottle in the back seat, it is considered an open container. Cannabis is also included under open container laws. It is an infraction to drive while consuming cannabis in any form.
